A local realtor shared that regular farmland goes for about $4-$5000 an acre, depending on the location, size of parcel, slope, if it has been fallow and needs work to bring it back to production, or if it has been in a good crop rotation. Potato land can go as high as $10,000/acre; however, dairy farmers generally cannot afford to pay that much.

It was operated with a private sector contract 8.5 hours a day under the supervision of IWMC, and closed for waste disposal in November, 2002. There is a landfill committee that can have three members of Council and two from IWMC (Karen MacDonald in 2024). The Mayor is the chair of the committee and there were no meetings called in 2024. Work started in 2011 to install a water supply system that served residents in the area adjacent to the landfill. To date, 32/53 eligible customers have been connected to the municipal water. The property continues to be used to store and move Waste Watch carts and roll-off containers.
- z. L'Nuey - For thousands of years, the Epekwitnewaq Mi'kmaq lived in harmony with this land. When the British arrived, colonizers labeled Epekwitk as a "wilderness, void of inhabitants" and erased Mi'kmaw language and presence from maps while turning these lands into prizes for settlers. As ancestral grounds were lost, the number of Epekwitnewaq Mi'kmaq dwindled and traditional ways of life began to fade. Existence became a grave struggle. In 1832, five brave elders reminded the colonizers: "Our fathers and your fathers had long talks, and they promised to leave us some of our land—but they did not—they drove us from place to place like wild beasts—that was not just." Generations of the Epekwitnewaq Mi'kmaq continue to bear injustices, enduring the loss of their lands and rights. L'Nuey reminds Islanders it is time to honour the treaty rights.

Mr. Sampson responded that there are stop signs present at the trail head due to the trail's being used for snowmobiles. There are also trail warning signs in advance and at the trail for motorists. The trail warning signs are intended to let vehicle traffic know that there may be users present, but does not give the users priority.
